The poets have always preceded

art and poetry in Vancouver, 1960 - present

Griffin Art Projects January 26 - April 27 2019

Opening reception: 7 - 9 pm Friday 25 January

Tour with guest curator Lee Plested Saturday 26 January 1 pm

... the poets have always preceded will begin its rhizomatic journey around 1960, collecting resonate examples of experimentation in art and poetry to uncover some of the fervent conversation, collaboration and innovation which developed here. Rather than attempting to abridge this incredibly rich history, the exhibition touches on successive moments in artist's practices to give an inspiring sample of the regions sophisticated achievements in art and letters...

... An essential element of the exhibition will be the written word itself, and will present the library of the Kootenay School of Writing as a public reading room within the gallery space. Visitors will have the opportunity to dive into a focused selection of the vast production of critical poetry that has been produced in Vancouver. This library space will also host a series of readings and discussion groups to present writing in a direct form, performed in the voice of the poet and digested and dissected through group discussion and review. ...

What If Romeo & Juliet ...

Take a new look at Shakespeare's magnificent and tragic love story. Do we all have the potential to become a Romeo, Juliet, Tybalt, or Mercutio? Shakespeare's timeless masterpiece and troubling tale, Romeo & Juliet, is re-examined in this adaptation for Theatre of Acrobatic Movement. It tells the story of two rival families, the Capulets and [the] Montagues, through the poetry of movement, the refinement of the bard's words, an alluring lighting design, and a powerful soundscape. What If Romeo & Juliet... revolves around the universal themes of love, hate, freedom, death, and rivalry. Could there be another ending to this beloved and famous tale? Ages 8+ at Presentation House Theatre, NV -- 604 990 3474 phtheatre.org
